

Margaret Poppe

Painting watercolor en plein air allows me to truly see the world in a way that I often miss as a casual observer – for example, the many colors in nature and how light and shadow give objects form. When painting I can let go of my thoughts and be fully present in the moment to experience the colors and light, the feel of the air, the smells and sounds that surround me.